Dave Wilson of The LA Times writes about Apple's pre-show hype and the associated let-down at the keynote, concluding "But the company has no real model for growth. Microsoft's monopoly power precludes any massive shift away from Windows, so how can Apple sell more boxes? The best thing Apple can do is to make computers that seamlessly integrate into a Windows network."

see, even brain challenged reporters know about microsoft. And you want to give them, what amounts to a subsidy in education? I bet that between all of you, you would be hard pressed to come up with two gonads.
